that will recommend no action. The latest trouble of Gen. Nelson A. Miles with the administration bears all the earmarks of a put-up-job. As commander of the army Gen. Miles was invited to appear before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs and give his opinion of the bill for the creation of a staff for the army, which he was known to oppose. The committee met behind closed doors and with the assurance that his personal opinions would be considered private, Gen. Miles was inveigled into talking freely, in addition to his carefully prepared statement of his official reasons for opposing the bill.
